INCONTINENCE ASSOCIATED DERMATITIS AND PRESSURE INJURIES IN AGED CARE

Incontinence Associated Dermatitis (IAD) and Pressure Injuries (PIs) are frequently occurring but largely preventable skin injuries. Many clinicians find it difficult to recognise the difference between IAD and PIs resulting in misdiagnosis and inappropriate treatment (Campbell, Gosley, Coleman, & Coyer, 2016).

IAD is inflammation of the skin because of incontinence and may be accompanied by redness, blistering, erosion of the skin, and secondary infection (Beeckman et al., 2015). IAD can be found wherever there is skin contact with urine and/or faeces. Individuals with faecal and urinary incontinence are at higher risk of developing IAD than those with urinary incontinence alone.

PIs are a localised injury to the skin and/or underlying soft tissue usually over a bony prominence or associated with a medical device (European Pressure Ulcer Advisory Panel, National Pressure Injury Advisory Panel, & Pan Pacific Pressure Injury Alliance, 2019). They occur as a result of intense and/or prolonged pressure in combination with shear (European Pressure Ulcer Advisory Panel et al., 2019).

There are several key differences between IAD and PIs based on the history, symptoms, location, the shape or edge of the affected area, presentation or depth, and other characteristics (Dissemond et al., 2021). The main differentiator between IAD and PIs is the presence of urinary and/or faecal incontinence. If the individual does not have incontinence, then it is not considered IAD.

From the 1 April 2023, the Department of Health and Aged Care have added six additional quality indicators for residential aged care. In addition to reporting PIs, it will now be a mandatory requirement for facilities to report on the percentage of care recipients with IAD (Australian Government Department of Health and Ageing, 2022).

Preserving skin integrity is the best way to prevent IAD and PIs from occurring.

Mölnlycke®
The Perfect Family for Wound Healing

Always follow the Directions for Use

Did you know....?

- Exudate is part of normal wound healing, but it can cause problems when in the wrong amount, in the wrong place or when of the wrong composition¹
- Excessive exudate is known to disturb healing and may cause cell and tissue damage²
- If a patient has Covid-19, the virus may be present in the exudate, and so pooling of exudate may increase the risk of exposure to Covid-19 for healthcare professionals^{3,4}
- Pooling of wound exudate may also create unpleasant odours, the intensity of which is typically associated with the bacterial load in the wound⁵

The compostable, highly absorbent alternative to blueys - the Greeny!

Traditional plastic Bluey underpads play a vital role in medical care, however they have long been scrutinised for their environmental impact, and rightly so.

Blueys are an extremely high-turnover consumable. A recent procurement audit of numerous Australian hospitals (conducted by sustainable healthcare advocacy group, TRA²SH²) found that between 15,600 and 96,000 Blueys were used at each site per year, relative to the number of theatres. With 1350 hospitals in Australia alone, that equates to roughly 75 million Blueys (over 1,950 tonnes) every year, taking over 100 years to break down when disposed in landfill.⁴

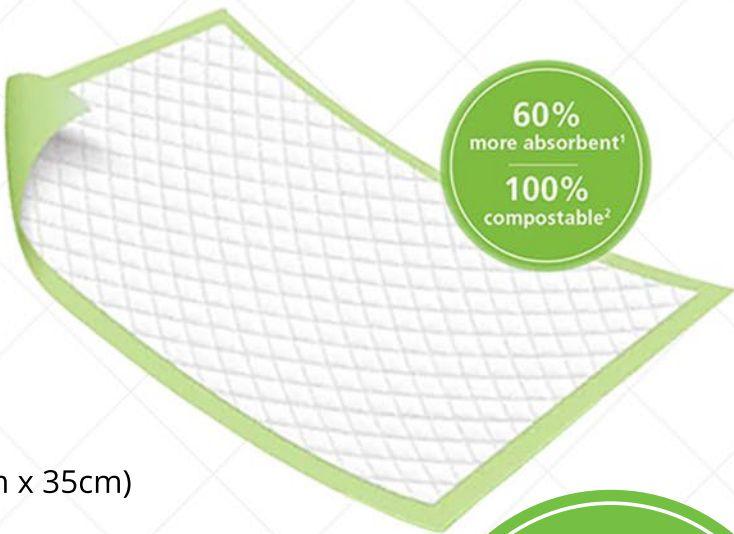

Like a Bluey, the Greeny® is designed to:

- Trap and contain liquids - protecting bedding, clothing and other surfaces from soilage and contamination.
- Provide an absorbent surface on which to perform clinical procedures.
- Reduce excessive or prolonged contact with moisture which can compromise the skin moisture barrier and lead to skin breakdown. Skin breakdown significantly increases the risk of shearing, pressure and friction injuries to the skin with the potential of developing localised or systemic infections.³

Made of cornstarch-based bioplastic with a 5-ply paper fluff pulp top layer sourced from responsibly managed forests¹, Greenys® are 100% compostable² and compliant with AS 4736 and EN 13432 standards. What's more, they are 60% more absorbent than 5-ply Blueys and 14% more absorbent than 8-ply Blueys.¹ Greenys® are also 14 times more breathable
