GETTING BACK TO BASICS

CLEARANCE

Caring for a person with a wound can be really challenging. There are so many factors that can potentially impact on the healing process including age, comorbid conditions, medications, lifestyle, and environmental factors. Then there are other factors, like our own knowledge, skills and experience, access to resources, and the clinical context in which we are working.

Accurate assessment and early intervention are strategies that can greatly improve patient outcomes. Sometimes though, knowing where to start and what information we need to collect can be overwhelming. But no matter how simple or how complex the wound situation, it all starts with getting back to the basics.

It's only through careful assessment and identifying the factors impacting on wound healing, that we can work out priorities and goals for treatment, implement appropriate interventions, select dressings with more confidence, and set measures to evaluate success or wound progress.

Whilst dressing selection is important, unless we have a good understanding of the purpose behind dressing selection, it's easy to make mistakes and miss the bigger picture.

In coming months, SSS Australia and Wound Specialist Services are working together to bring you some Back to Basics Wound Care Workshops at select locations in South East Queensland. In these workshops, we will demystify the wound assessment process and cut through the confusion on dressing selection. With opportunities for hands-on skills development, interactive case study scenarios, and trade exhibits, we hope you can make it.

Biatain® Silicone

A perfect fit. Every time.

Biatain® Silicone with 3DFit Technology reduces exudate pooling and thereby the risk of infection.

If a gap forms between a dressing and the wound bed it can impact the healing. It is here that excess exudate can pool, leading to bacterial growth, leakage and potentially delayed healing.

However, there is a simple solution to this common challenge. Thanks to 3DFit Technology, Biatain® Silicone conforms to the wound bed to fill the gap and reduce exudate pooling for optimal wound healing conditions.

If you are using a disposable bathing product in a high dependency application such as aged care, it is paramount that independent studies such as the above provide (clinical) reassurance to both the caregiver as well as the recipient.

It is studies such as these that differentiate brands - all disposable wipes are not the same. Some may contain ingredients which may not be conducive to maximising high dependency skin care outcomes.

Patients in high dependency situations, including aged care residents and home care clients, have a higher predisposition to suffering from damaged tissue and/or infection.

HiCare Bath has undergone extensive independent and evidence-based studies to substantiate the integrity of our product. These tests have significantly differentiated HiCare Bath's quality and integrity as compared to other competitor brands.

Bio burden studies at an independent Sydney microbiology laboratory.

The report on these studies clearly indicates we meet the BP 2011 standards for topicals, moreover, our packs cannot breed gram +ve and gram -ve (S aureus, P aeruginosa), eColi, MRSA, A niger and C albicans. Water is a component of all wipes, water is also the vehicle capable of breeding the bacteria P aeruginosa (also known as pseudomonas). Our testing confirms absolute safety for the end user recipient.

RIPT (repeat skin patch) consumer dermatological studies at a research laboratory in the USA.

This report indicates HiCare Bath had no negative outcomes - there were no reports of allergic reaction or sensitivity (Even at Australian trade expos, we have seen evidence of no sensitivity with some nurses with pre-existing psoriasis - the formulation is gentle and nurturing).

Independent Research Study: The Treatment and Prevention of Skin Tears.

A 2010 study ('Sharp Clinical Solutions' by Kate Sharp and Eileen Wilkins) was undertaken by The Wound Centre in Sydney. In part, this study advocates the use of HiCare Bath for skin tear treatment and prevention. It is freely downloadable from their website.
